Hog-sties are usually built in a very plain and simple method, the chief objects being considered those of warm dry situations for the animals to He in, with small areas or yards before them, and proper troughs fitted up for holding their food. They are most commonly constructed with lean-to or shed roofs, and have but seldom more than six or seven feet width, with height in the same proportion. Iri order to have them as convenient as possible, they should be at no very great distance from the house and offices, being well placed for the kitchen and dairy, but as little connected with the other outbuildings as may be. Some have suggested the great propriety and advantage, in particular cases, of having them connected in such a manner with the scullery, as that the whole of the refuse articles from it...

Reviews

This publication may be really worth a go through, and a lot better than other. It really is writter in simple terms and never difficult to understand. Once you begin to read the book, it is extremely difficult to leave it before concluding.
