So, along the line, the advocates of the natural order of learning have believed that if we could organize method, if we knew the psychology of the child better, if we knew how the young child's awakening mind develops, we could know how to provide an environment by which the child's learning could be accomplished. As I have followed education in practice and education in theory for several years in connection with this problem it has seemed to me that in our American schools today and especially in y American grammar school and in the American primary school, more or less blindly and in a more or less fragmentary way, we are working out here, what I have called a new basis 01 method and that new basis of method represents in a way, but in a difficult way, a combination...
